

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

Participant Bios

Bruce Bagley

Bruce Bagley holds a PhD in Political Science from the University of California, Los Angeles. His main research interests are in U.S.-Latin American relations, with an emphasis on drug trafficking and security issues. From 1991 to 1995 he served as Associate Dean of the Graduate School of International Studies at the University of Miami. Prior to his appointment at UM, he was assistant professor of Comparative Politics and Latin American Studies at the School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) of the Johns Hopkins University. Currently, Dr. Bagley serves as Chairman and Professor at the Graduate School of International Studies at the University of Miami and has authored numerous books and scholarly articles on drug trafficking and security issues in the Americas.

John J. Bailey

John Bailey received a PhD in Political Science from the University of Wisconsin- Madison and has taught at Georgetown University since 1970. Most recently his research has concentrated on issues of national and public security in the U.S.-Mexico relationship. During 1980-90 he directed the Mexico Seminar at the U.S. Department of State's Foreign Service Institute. John Bailey has chaired the Government Department (1987-90) and directed the Latin American Studies Program (1972-74; 1994-96). Also, he received an "Honored Faculty" award from the School of Foreign Service in 2002 for excellence in teaching. He publishes a monthly column in the Mexico City daily newspaper, El Universal and has published articles and book chapters on a variety of policy issues in Mexican politics, including agriculture, public budgeting, decentralization, education, electoral reform, government-business relations and social security.

Robert Blecker

Robert Blecker received his PhD in economics at Stanford University and is Professor of Economics and Chair of the Department of Economics at American University, Washington, DC. He is also Affiliated Faculty of the School of International Service at AU, a Research Associate at the Economic Policy Institute (Washington, DC), a Senior Research Fellow of the Center for Economic and Policy Research (Washington, DC), and a Research Scholar at the Political

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

Economy Research Institute (University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA). Robert Blecker is a member of the editorial boards of the International Review of Applied Economics and Investigación Económica (edited at the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México). His research interests include international trade, open economy macroeconomics, economic integration in North America, the Mexican economy, and the limits to export-led growth strategies in developing countries. He is author of numerous books, articles, and book chapters on economic policy.

Chappell Lawson

Chappell Lawson received his Ph.D. in Political Science from Stanford University and is an Associate Professor of Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). His major research interests are Latin American politics, Mexican politics, democratization, political communication, and mass media, and U.S. foreign policy. Professor Lawson was a National Fellow at The Hoover Institution, Stanford University (2002-2003) and a Visiting Research Fellow at the Center for U.S.-Mexico Studies at the University of California, San Diego (1998-99). Before joining the MIT faculty, he served as a Director of Inter-American Affairs on the National Security Council. Chappell Lawson is the author of one book and the editor of another, both concerning democratic processes in Mexico and numerous articles, book chapters and papers on issues of democratization, elections, and mass media in Mexico.

Stephen Mumme

Stephen Mumme received his PhD in Political Science from the University of Arizona and is currently Professor of Political Science at Colorado State University. His areas of research interest lie in comparative politics, Latin American politics, and comparative environmental policy. His recent research focuses especially on transboundary environmental policy reform in North America and specifically on the U.S.-Mexico border, and NAFTA's environmental impact in the region. He was a Senior Fulbright Scholar with El Colegio de Sonora (1997-1998) where he studied environmental decentralization in Mexico's northern border region. He is a member of the advisory boards of the International Transboundary Research Center at the University of New Mexico and the recently established Border Information and Outreach Service. Stephen Mumme is on the editorial boards of the Political Research Quarterly and Journal of Borderlands Studies. He is also the author of various monographs, articles and book chapters on environmental management and politics, and co-author of a book on political science.

Andrew Selee

Andrew Selee has a PhD in Policy Studies from the University of Maryland and is currently Director of the Woodrow Wilson Center's Mexico Institute, which promotes dialogue and policy research on U.S.-Mexico relations. He has served as Senior Program Associate of the Latin American Program and as professional staff in the U.S. House of Representatives. He is editor or co-editor of several publications on US-Mexico relations, Mexican politics, immigration, and decentralization. Andrew Selee is also an Adjunct Professor of Government at Johns Hopkins University and has been a Visiting Scholar at El Colegio de México. He is a Board member of the U.S.-Mexico Fulbright Commission (Comexus), a Contributing Editor to the Handbook of Latin American Studies, and a Term Member of the Council on Foreign Relations. He has edited and co-edited numerous volumes on U.S.- Mexican relations, decentralization and Mexican politics.

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

Peter Smith

Peter Smith received his PhD in Comparative Politics, with an emphasis on Latin America from Columbia University. He is Professor of Political Science and Simón Bolívar Professor of Latin American Studies at the University of California, San Diego. His research interests focus on comparative politics, Latin American politics, and U.S.-Latin American relations. He has served in faculty positions at Dartmouth College (1966-68), the University of Wisconsin-Madison (1968-80), and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (1980-87). In 1981 he was president of the Latin American Studies Association. He has also served as co-director of the Bilateral Commission on the Future of United States-Mexican Relations and of the Inter-American Commission on Drug Policy. From 1989 to 2001 he served as Director of UCSD's Center for Iberian and Latin American Studies, and from 1994 to 2001 he was Director of Latin American Studies. His publications include twenty books and approximately one hundred book chapters or journal articles.

Roberto Sánchez

Roberto Sanchez holds a PhD in Regional and Urban Planning from the University of Dortmund and is an international expert in urbanization and global environmental change. He is currently a Professor of Environmental Sciences at the University of California, Riverside. His research concentrates on the human impact of global environmental change, environmental issues in urban areas, sustainable development, U.S.-Mexico border environmental policies and practices, and the relationship between trade and the environment. He has served as director the University of California Institute for the United States and Mexico (UC MEXUS) and is Co-Chair of the International Human Dimensions Program (IHDP) core project on Urbanization and Global Environmental Change (UGEC).

David A. Shirk

David Shirk is received his Ph.D. in Political Science at the University of California, San Diego, and is the Director of the Trans-Border Institute (TBI) and Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of San Diego. He conducts research on Mexican politics, U.S.-Mexican relations, with an emphasis on law enforcement and security. As TBI Director, Dr. Shirk also directs the Justice in Mexico Project, a bi-national initiative involving scholars and

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

experts conducting research on criminal justice and the rule of law in Mexico. David Shirk was a fellow at the UC San Diego Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies from 1998-99 and 2001-2003. He is the author of a recent book on Mexican politics, and also of many articles, papers and reviews concerning democratization and border issues in Mexico.

Carol Wise

Carol Wise holds a PhD in Political Science from Columbia University. She is currently a Professor at the School of International Relations at the University of Southern California, where she teaches courses on Latin American economic development, trade politics in the Western Hemisphere, international political economy, and North-South relations. Her work and writing has focused most extensively on Argentina, Mexico, and Peru. She has served as co-director for the Latin American Studies Initiative in the College of Letters, Arts, & Sciences and as director of the doctoral program in Political Economy and Public Policy (PEPP) at USC. She was also a faculty member at Johns Hopkins University's School of Advanced International Studies in Washington, DC. She has written many books, book chapters and articles on trade integration, exchange rate crises, institutional reform, and the political economy of market restructuring in the region.

Lorenzo Meyer

Lorenzo Meyer received his PhD in International Relations from El Colegio de México, A.C. and completed post-doctoral work in Political Science at the University of Chicago. He is currently Professor and Researcher at the Center for International Studies of El Colegio de México, and is widely recognized as the foremost historian and political analyst in Mexico. Lorenzo Meyer has been a visiting professor in numerous universities including University of Columbia, University of Chicago, and Stanford University. He is also an editorialist at the prestigious national newspaper Reforma, and is the host of Primer Plano, a political TV show in Mexico's largest network. He is a member of the National System of Investigators, and has published numerous books on Mexican history, politics, and culture, and U.S.-Mexican relations since the late 1970s.

Gustavo Vega

Gustavo Vega received his PhD in Political Science from Yale University and is currently Professor of International Political Economy at the Center of International Studies of El Colegio de México, A.C. He is also Coordinator of the Inter-institutional Program for Research on North America (PIERAN) administered by El Colegio de México. His areas of expertise reside in processes of regional economic integration, particularly in North America, Mexican foreign economic policy, and dispute settlement mechanisms in NAFTA. He has served as Director of the Program for North American Studies at CIS of El Colegio de Mexico (1990 to 1997), and as Visiting Professor at Yale and Duke Universities. In addition he has served on various panels as an expert on NAFTA. Gustavo Vega has authored and co-authored many books, articles and book chapters on North American trade.

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

David R. Mares

David Mares holds a PhD in Political Science from Harvard University and is a Professor of Political Science at the University of California, San Diego (UCSD). He is also Adjunct Professor at the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies of UCSD and serves as the Baker Institute Scholar for Energy Studies at the Baker Institute of Rice University. His research and teaching interests include Latin American energy politics, the political economy of drug policy, defense policy, civil–military relations and the use of photographic imagery in politics. He has served as Professor and Researcher at the Center for International Studies at El Colegio de Mexico, A.C., and as Fulbright Professor at the Universidad de Chile and Visiting Professor at FLACSO-Ecuador. David Mares has served on the editorial board of Latin American Research Review, and has been a member of the international advisory boards of the Instituto Latinoamericano de Relaciones Civiles-Militares (based in Peru) and the Center for U.S.-Mexico Studies at UCSD. He is the author and editor of many books, articles and book chapters, focusing specifically on energy policy and politics in Latin America.

Sergio Aguayo

Sergio Aguayo completed his PhD and postgraduate studies at Johns Hopkins' Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS). He has been a professor and researcher at El Colegio de México since 1977. He is President of the Board of Directors of Fundar, Centro de Análisis e Investigación. He is a frequent writer for newspapers and magazines, most notably Reforma and was a founding member of the newspaper La Jornada. He also serves as an analyst for the Mexican political analysis television show, Primer Plano. He has also taught at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia de Económicas (CIDE), the Universidad Autónoma de México (UNAM) and at a number of other national and international universities. From 1990 to 1996 Sergio Aguayo was president of the Mexican Academy of Human Rights and from 1994 to 1999 he was a member of Civic Alliance, one of Mexico's most prominent NGOs. He has written numerous books and articles on Mexican history, and U.S.-Mexican relations.

Luís Astorga

Luís Astorga holds a PhD in the Sociology of Development from the Sorbonne University and is a researcher at the Institute of Social Research of the National Autonomous University of Mexico, (IIS-UNAM). He is a specialist on the Mexican drug trade and is currently working on the project "Traffic and drug traffickers in the Mexican northern borders". He is also a network member of the MOST/UNDCP Project "Economic and Social Transformations connected with the

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

International Drug Problem". He is the author of various books and articles on drug trafficking and security in Mexico.

Gustavo del Castillo

Gustavo del Castillo holds a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Texas at Austin. He is a founding professor and researcher at El Colegio de la Frontera Norte (El Colef). His research combines economic anthropology and economic policy with special emphasis on North America. He has been a visiting professor at several universities, including the University of California at San Diego, the University of Southern California, The University of Texas, Universidad Iberoamericana (Mexico City), Universidad de Baja California (Tijuana), and others in Europe. He has been a visiting researcher at Carleton University in Canada, International Development Research Centre (Ottawa), Overseas Development Council (Washington, D.C.), and at the Center for U.S.–Mexican Studies in San Diego. At Colef, he has been editor of Frontera Norte, the university journal, and director of the Social Studies and U.S. Studies departments. He has published more than 50 papers in refereed journals and various books.

Gerardo Esquivel Hernandez

Gerardo Esquivel received his Ph.D. in economics from Harvard in 1997. He is currently a Professor of Economics at El Colegio de Mexico, A.C., where he has been since 1998. Previously, he worked as a Senior Macroeconomics Researcher at the Harvard Institute for International Development (HIID), where he was involved in a project on economic development in Central America. Gerardo Esquivel has also been a consultant for the International Monetary Fund, the Inter-American Development Bank, the World Bank, the United Nations Development Program and the Central Bank in Mexico. He served as Economic Advisor for Mexico City's Secretary of Finance between 2004 and 2005. He has written extensively on several economic issues and has received numerous distinctions for his research. He was recently awarded the 2005 National Prize for Research that is given annually by the Mexican Academy of Sciences for the most outstanding scholar in the Social Sciences in Mexico under 40 years of age.

Maria Isabel Studer Nogúez

Maria Isabel Studer Nogúez holds a PhD in International Relations from the John's Hopkins University-School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS). She is founding Director of the Center for Dialogue and Analysis on North America, at the Tecnológico de Monterrey-Campus in Mexico City. She has served as Research Director at the North American Commission for Labor Cooperation (Washington DC), and as a member of the Mexican National Research System. In addition she has been a full-time professor and researcher at the Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO-Mexico), and the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE), visiting professor at the Colorado College and lecturer at almost

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

all major national universities in Mexico. Isabel Studer has received several distinctions, including the Fulbright scholarship and the Galo Plaza Fellowship at the Inter-American Dialogue. She was also General Director for North American Affairs at the Mexican Ministry of the Environment and Natural Resources and Alternate Representative of the Minister of the Environment at the North American Commission for Environmental Cooperation. She is author and co-editor of several books and has written many articles on issues related to the process of North American integration and international relations. She was also columnist for El Universal, a major Mexican newspaper.

David Fitzgerald

David Fitzgerald received his PhD in Sociology from UCLA and is Associate Professor of Sociology and Associate Director of the Center for Comparative Immigration Studies at the University of California, San Diego. His research interests are focused on international migration, nationalism, transnationalism, comparative immigration and nationality law, specifically in the U.S. and Mexico. He is the author and co-editor of a number of books and many articles concentrated on Mexican migration issues. His major current project examines relationships between liberalism and racism in the immigration and nationality laws of 22 countries in the Americas from 1850 to 2000.

Alberto Díaz-Cayeros

Alberto Díaz-Cayeros holds a PhD in Political Science from Duke University with a specialization in comparative politics, political economy, and international political economy. He is an Associate Professor at the School of International Relations and Pacific Studies and Director of the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies. His research interests include poverty, development, federalism, clientelism, and patronage. He is affiliated with the Center for Democracy, Development, and Rule of Law (CDDRL), the Stanford Center for International Development (SCID), and is a member of the board of the Center for Latin American Studies. He served as Assistant Professor of Political Science at Stanford University and before that, taught at UCLA and Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México in Mexico City. He has also been a researcher at CIDAC, a think tank in Mexico City. He has been widely published in Spanish and English and is currently working on a book manuscript entitled Strategies of Vote Buying: Social Transfers, Democracy and Welfare in Mexico.

René Zenteno

René Zenteno received his PhD in Sociology and Demography from the University of Texas-Austin. He also completed postdoctoral studies at the University of Pennsylvania. He is currently the Academic Secretary-General for El Colegio de la Frontera Norte, where he heads the Population Studies Department. His research interests focus on demography, migration and labor markets. From 2006-2008 he served as the Executive Director of the UCSD Center for U.S.-

Mexico and the United States: Confronting the Twenty-First Century

July 24 & 25, 2009

Mexican Studies. Over the past 20 years René Zenteno has served as Director of various development centers, and as Researcher and Professor for a number of institutions in Mexico and the United States. He is a member of Mexico's System of National Researchers and of the Mexican Academy of Sciences and in 2008 enjoyed the distinction of becoming the President of the Mexican Demography Society. He is the author of various books, book chapters and articles on Mexican demographics.

Tonatiuh Guillén López

Tonatiuh Guillén López received his Ph.D. in Social Sciences, specializing in Sociology from El Colegio de México, A.C. He is currently serving as President of El Colegio de la Frontera Norte (El Colef), where he is also a researcher. In addition, he is the director of Colef's Department of Public Administration and of the institute's academic journal- Frontera Norte. His main research focus is regional policy and local government modernization. He was general coordinator of the inter-institutional agenda of the Municipal Reform in Mexico and is a member of the Technical Committee of Management and Local Government Award. He has authored 12 books and over 40 book chapters and articles in academic journals and belongs to Mexico's National System of Researchers.